

Pagcor denies casino deal with Stanley Ho

By Philip C. Tabor

NO, STANLEY Ho is not coming to town.

The Philippine Amusement and Gaming Corp. (Pagcor) yesterday denied accusations it was helping Macao casino mogul Ho make a comeback to the country.

Pagcor said its board of directors on March 29 passed a resolution categorically denying that it had any dealings with Ho, adding that it had "no plan" to work with him in operating a casino "or in any related matter."

In a statement, Pagcor said, "This resolution was passed in order to clear the rumor that Pagcor has hidden relations with Ho and to [reassure] the public's scrutiny over this issue."

Pagcor issued the statement after House Rep. Isaac Matras said on March 28 that Ho was "well on his way to guiding up the lion's share" of casino operations in the country with the reopening of his mothballed $500-million Sunba Palace Floating Restaurant on Manila Bay in May.

Matras had also urged Pagcor to disclose its dealings with Ho's alleged associates, Lin Wei Ching and Cheng Yu-ting, the owners of the new Hyatt Hotel and Casino Manila on Pedro Gil Street in Manila.

Pagcor said it had not received any "applications or proposals from Ho" to open gaming establishments in the country. It also said it had "no intention" of setting up a casino in Ho's floating restaurant.

It added that it was "not aware of any plan" regarding Sunba Palace, whose opening several years ago was widely opposed by the Catholic Church and other groups who believed it was going to be converted into a casino.

"(Pagcor) steadfastly its commitment to the highest principles of probity, integrity and transparency," the Pagcor statement said.

"Its record-breaking performance year after year after chairman [Eduardo] Cojuangco took over is a clear indication of the soundness of the business decisions and management style implemented by the current Pagcor administration," it said.

Pagcor pointed out that in 2004, it posted a "phenomenal" income of P20.0 billion, the highest in its 22-year history.

The 2004 income beat the previous record of P20.23 billion set in 2002, which had earned Pagcor the top spot in the Securities and Exchange Commission's list of the most profitable corporations that year.

"This achievement strongly reinforces Pagcor's position as one of the most reliable sources of much-needed revenue for the government," Pagcor said.

Matras had also called for a congressional investigation into Pagcor's recent signing of 60-40 revenue-sharing deals with a slew of slot machine operators, "in apparent violation of its charter that sets private investors' income to a maximum of only 10 percent."

"These deals will bleed the government of billions at a time when the public is being squeezed for more tax revenues," Matras said.

"Pagcor has walked around the law by [granting] these lease contracts for slot machines which are, for all intents and purposes, slot franchises. Pagcor has in fact stripped the power of Congress," she said.

ISPs not doing enough to curb child porn, says research center

By Yoko Camarero

IDEAL Internet service providers or ISPs can play a critical role in curbing child pornography in the Philippines, but they proved "uncooperative" when approached by a research center coordinated by the United Nations Children's Fund (Unicef) to write a book on this tech-heavy crime.

"We were so frustrated with ISPs. They were uncooperative and they did not want to talk with us; not a single interview was granted," recalled Dr. Elizabeth Francisco De Castro of the Center for Integrative and Development Studies of the University of the Philippines.

"What message are they sending us?" De Castro said, adding that the companies could have offered "suggestions" on how law enforcement can trace and apprehend cyber-porn sites that use servers.

The UN professor made the remarks at yesterday's launch of the book "Child Pornography in the Philippines" at the Makati Shangri-la Hotel.

The affair was graced by Unicef executive director Carol Bellamy and Social Welfare Secretary Caro-los "Dinky" Soliman.

De Castro leads the UN-CEIP Psychological Trauma and Human Rights Program, which the United commission last year to write the book, the first of its kind in Southeast Asia.

According to the book, there is "circumstantial evidence that child pornography is occurring in the Philippines as a result of both foreign and domestic perpetrators seeking to exploit poor and vulnerable families and children."

One of its "most disturbing findings" is that the Internet serves as "a hub between local producers and networks of pornography operators overseas."

But despite this alarming trend, Ateneo Davao, the CEIP member who authored the book, said none of the eight ISP companies he approached between April and September last year granted his request for interviews.

"They either claimed to have no idea or that (the subject) is not their problem," he said the biggest.

"They would have given us suggestions on how to (go after) the websites that put out child pornography," said De Castro, who stressed that these companies should be governed by a "self-regulating mechanism" for this purpose.

Both De Castro and Trinidad stressed that the ISPs were reluctant because they were simply "protecting their business."

All speakers during the launch underscored how technology—including digital cameras on cell phones—had made child porn one of the most elusive criminal operations in the world today.

De Castro said the trade had become so sophisticated that one trader operated in Metro Manila involved simply sending a trade chat's digital photo "to a cell phone" as a reference "in exchange for 1000 text" in either the name herself or a pimp who would take and provide the photos, she said.

Bellamy said that apart from legislators and law enforcers, the private sector should get more involved in the war against child porn. She made special mention of ISPs as well as travel agencies, the latter in relation to the so-called sex tours.

On Monday, the Unicef official told lawmakers attending the Inter-Parlamentary Union assembly in Manila how child trafficking had grown into a global, $20-billion industry, rivaling the trade in illicit drugs and arms.

'Too many holidays'

By Joanne Aring

THE DEPARTMENT of Labor and Employment has tabled a proposal to Congress to put an end to the gross declarations of public and special non-working holidays.

"The behavior of economic factors seems to be put to productive use. Too many holidays have a negative net effect on employers and workers alike," Labor Undersecretary of Workers Welfare and Protection Benedicto Ernesto Blundo Jr. told reporters.

He said the DOLE supports Marikina City Rep. Del de Guzman's proposed resolution calling on the executive branch not to declare any more public holidays apart from the 11 legal holidays and two special non-working days.

The labor official said about a million daily wage earners, or those who earn on a no-work-no-pay basis, would be the most affected by the move in holidays.

Employers complain that giving extra pay to their workers who go to work on holidays does not necessarily translate to increased productivity, Blundo explained.

Also, the undersecretary added, some businesses would suffer loss of productivity since they would be paying monthly wage earners even if they do not go to work on the declared public holiday.

De Guzman said that during holidays, employers pay their employees about P5.00 billion a day even if there was no work done.

"The practice of declaring additional non-working holidays contradicts our imperative need as a nation to act better and work harder in improving our economic situation and negates the value of labor and industry in helping an important fabric of nation-building," the lawmaker said.

Declaring an extra holiday usually Fridays or Mondays when the regular holiday falls on a weekend, originated from President Macapagal-Arroyo's "holiday economy" or "longer weekend" drive to boost domestic tourism.

Customs misses Q1 target, but not by much

All roads lead to Rome

By Giovanni

IN ROME, the world capital of Catholicism, the Italian government has decided to support the United Nations mission in Lebanon. The decision was announced on March 6, 1988, after the United Nations Security Council had voted 12-0-2 to authorize the mission. The Italian government's decision is seen as a significant step towards the normalization of relations between the two countries.

Thais fear new bomb attacks by militants

BANGKOK—Thailand braced for possible new attacks Tuesday in its insurgency-plagued south following two days of bomb blasts and grenade attacks that killed at least two people and wounded dozens.

The grenade assaults Monday in Muslim-dominated Narathiwat province and Sunday's deadly bombings in Songkhro province fueled concerns that an Islamic separatist insurgency in the region was gaining momentum.

Security forces have been put on high alert in the region. Overnight in Washington, the US state department warned that escalating, indiscriminate violence in southern Thailand made the area risky for American travelers.

No casualties were reported among the defenders in Monday's assault in Narathiwat's Jala Ling district, in which the attackers used one or more M79 grenade launchers, said police Col. Thanasopak Wongsitaph. He indicated that assailants had been warded about the attack.

He said the attackers operated in two groups of about 10 men each, and fled to the forest on a nearby mountain, where they were pursued by security forces.

Earlier Monday a bomb blasted a road in neighboring Yala province, wounding two soldiers.

The attacks came even though security forces were on high alert after two people were killed Sunday night by a bomb at the Yai International Airport in Songkhro province.

A department store and a hotel in the province were also bombed, and more than 70 people in all were wounded.

The bombings set off fears that Muslim insurgents who had previously testified their attacks in the southernmost provinces of Yala, Narathiwat and Pattani were broadening their theater of operations.

Since January 2004, almost 100 people have been killed in sectarian violence in the provinces. The Muslim militant groups have generally restricted their almost daily attacks to hit-and-run shootings carried out by one or two gunmen and small bombings.

Songkhro is just north of the three Muslim-dominated provinces, and the Yai is the biggest city in Thailand's far south. Airports, railway stations and other major destinations throughout the south were on full alert after the Songkhro bombings.

Interior Minister Chuan Leekiat said authorities have pictures of the attackers at the airport from closed-circuit cameras, but declined to give further details. Military officials have said that the airport bomb was left in a bag by a man in the waiting area.

Thai police officers examine Monday the site where the bomb exploded at Chaocharo Department Store Sunday night in Hat Yai town of Songkhro province, southern Thailand.

Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra condemned the blasts, expressed his condolences to the victims and said security had to be strengthened.

Thaksin has been criticized previously for adopting an even the policy that critics said would only breed more insurgents. However, he has recently called for a more measured approach that would incorporate military action.

Southern Thailand's Muslim majority has long complained of discrimination by the central government, Thailand is predominantly Buddhist.

Reporter recalls light moments with Pope

By Victor L. Stipanow

VATICAN CITY—I was on a plane, no shower, bedraggled, wearing a crumpled safari jacket still damp from a morning in the Seychelles.

As I thought I should apologize to Pope John Paul II before joining him for dinner, duly explaining that these were my "working clothes."

"And these are my working clothes," he responded with a smile, chuckling his white robe in make his point.

It was a remarkable moment, a Pope joking and showing his down-to-earth side to a journalist, whereas his predecessors had been held in such regard that they were carried around on portable thrones.

From the Oct. 16, 1978, evening the name of Cardinal Karol Wojtyla was announced as the new Pope, presiding many among the throngs in St. Peter's Square in about "chi e?" (who?) it was clear this would be a different papacy.

The 50 reporters who traveled with John Paul on his foreign jauntages got an especially close—and different—look at the Polish prelate.

We were beside him as he shuffled to the mouth of Africa, hands in the Congo, as he winced when security guards roughly pushed back a long line of on the ship home to Poland, when he was rushed to his plane after another broke out between soldiers in East Timor and Indonesia nearby. He ate with his eyes closed and prayed.

Until his health began declining about a decade ago, he walked up and down the aisles of the plane answering questions in about a half dozen languages, presiding over the complaints we had better access to him.

His last full-fledged airplane news conference came on route to Rome in 1998.

A year later, flying to India, he came back to press the press and take one question. He didn't hesitate when asked his opinion of Pope Pius XII in a time when criticism was building over his possible involvement. "He was a great Pope," John Paul said.

Back to the where-fore then John Paul was extremely weary after a long flight—up to New Zealand and Australia in 1996, but he asked a reporter and the Australian ambassador to the Holy See who was about the Qantas pilot to join him.

He wanted to hear how we thought he did.

He seemed a little shaky with the ambassador, starting with the choice of when when the news suggested a red and John Paul said he preferred a white, which he slipped on while picking up his silver crosier.

After that was downhill for the journey. When he landed Australia were more English than American in style, John Paul said in offhand English "American."

It was on one of those trips that I learned just how powerful his private secretary, Archbishop Stanislaw Dziwisz, had become. The Pope had dodged a question on a new wave of strikes against the communist government in Poland when Dziwisz cut off the news conference.

Seed firm in hot water for abnormal cabbages

By James G. Thompson

It was a quiet day in the seed company's office, but the atmosphere was anything but calm. The company, which has been in the business for over 50 years, was facing a crisis. A batch of cabbages they had sold to a local farmer had been found to be abnormal. The cabbages were not only of a different shape and size, but they also had a different taste. The farmer, who had been a loyal customer for years, was furious. He had sold the cabbages to a local restaurant, and the restaurant had been forced to throw them away. The seed company was now facing a lawsuit from the farmer, and the local restaurant was also facing a lawsuit from the health department. The seed company's reputation was in jeopardy, and they were in a race to find out what had gone wrong.

Business

The seed company's office was a busy place. The company was a family-owned business, and the owner, a man in his 60s, was the one who had been in the business since he was a young man. He was a hard worker, and he had built the company into a successful one. But now, he was facing a crisis. The company was in a race to find out what had gone wrong with the cabbages. The owner was determined to find out what had happened, and he was willing to do whatever it took to get the company back on track.

Another SLE accident kills 5, injures 18 others

By James G. Thompson

It was a tragic day in the town of SLE. A school bus was involved in a serious accident, and the results were devastating. Five people were killed, and 18 others were injured. The accident occurred on a busy road, and the school bus was carrying a full load of children. The driver, a man in his 40s, was not experienced, and he was driving too fast. The bus lost control, and it rolled over. The children were trapped inside, and the driver was unable to get them out. The accident was a disaster, and it was a tragedy for the town of SLE.

Info exec named tourism director

By James G. Thompson

It was a surprise announcement. A man, who was an information executive, was named as the new director of the tourism department. The man was in his 50s, and he had a long career in the information industry. He was a well-known figure in the industry, and he was a hard worker. The announcement was a surprise, but it was a good one. The man was a good leader, and he was a good person. The tourism department was in need of a new director, and the man was the perfect person for the job.

BSP seen to lean toward tighter monetary policy

MANILA, June 1 (AP) — The Philippine government is expected to adopt a tighter monetary policy to combat inflation, according to a report from the International Monetary Fund (IMF). The report says that the government should increase interest rates and reduce the money supply to bring inflation under control. The report also says that the government should improve its fiscal management and reduce its budget deficit.

DOF open to oil tariff rollback

By Dennis P. Sison

MANILA, Philippines — The Department of Finance (DOF) is open to a rollback of oil tariffs, but it is not ready to announce any decision on the matter, a DOF spokesman said.

The DOF is currently reviewing the proposal for a rollback of oil tariffs, which is being pushed by the oil industry. The DOF is also considering the impact of the proposal on the government's revenue and the economy.

SMC seen to raise bid for Ausste food firm

By Michael J. Sison

MANILA, Philippines — The San Miguel Corporation (SMC) is expected to raise its bid for the Australian food firm Ausste, a source familiar with the company's plans said.

The source said that SMC is currently in the process of reviewing the bid and may raise it to make it more competitive.

SMC is a leading food and beverage company in the Philippines and has been expanding its operations abroad.

Ausste is a food firm based in Australia and has been operating in the Philippines for several years.

The acquisition of Ausste by SMC would strengthen SMC's position in the food and beverage market in the Philippines.

SMC has a long history of successful acquisitions and has been a major player in the Philippine economy.

The acquisition of Ausste is expected to be completed within the next few months.

SMC is a public company listed on the Philippine Stock Exchange and has a market capitalization of over $1 billion.

The acquisition of Ausste is a significant move for SMC and is expected to have a positive impact on the company's financial performance.

SMC is a member of the San Miguel Group, which is one of the largest and most influential business groups in the Philippines.

The acquisition of Ausste is a testament to SMC's commitment to growth and expansion.

SMC is a company that has consistently delivered strong returns to its shareholders and is expected to continue to do so in the future.

The acquisition of Ausste is a key part of SMC's strategy to diversify its portfolio and increase its market reach.

SMC is a company that has a strong track record of successful acquisitions and is expected to continue to do so in the future.

Work is important, but the new World's Half Marathon Series is "just a game." The series has nothing but "happy endings" for runners who complete each race, with the guarantee that at the end of the 10-race series, the runner will be "the winner."

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the quality of the work environment for women. The Women's Health Initiative (WHI) is a major effort to address this issue. The WHI is a large-scale, long-term study that is designed to investigate the health of women and to develop strategies to improve their health. The WHI is a collaborative effort between the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and the National Cancer Institute (NCI). The WHI is a multi-center study that is being conducted in several locations across the United States. The WHI is a landmark study that is expected to have a major impact on the health of women.

PIIAT is Supporting us and we are!

There is a wealth of research that suggests that the most effective way to improve the quality of care is to focus on the patient. This is the central theme of the book, which is a collection of essays by leading experts in the field. The book is divided into three parts: the first part deals with the patient's perspective, the second part deals with the provider's perspective, and the third part deals with the system's perspective. The book is a valuable resource for anyone interested in improving the quality of care.

Let's get back to the fact that our Reiss Agency got extremely busy preparing a multi-ethnic group of 27 males and infants against their wishes about its parents, from one legislative and ethnic perspective. When reality hit the baby's face, Reiss knew it was time to get out of there.

with the "natural" growth of the economy in the short run. In the long run, the government has to be able to finance the budget deficit by increasing the money supply. This is the basic, well-known conclusion that leads to the issue of monetary expansion. In the short run, the government can finance the budget deficit by increasing the money supply, but in the long run, the government has to be able to finance the budget deficit by increasing the money supply.

Their job is to make the transition from the classroom to the workplace as smooth as possible. In the process, they provide the critical training that will determine the success or failure of the new hire.

But training is not just a one-time event. It's a continuous process that evolves as the employee's needs change. And it's a process that involves a lot of collaboration between the employee and the training provider.

So, how do you make sure that your training is effective? Here are some tips:

- Know your audience. What are the employee's current skills and knowledge? What are their learning preferences? What are their career goals?
- Set clear objectives. What do you want the employee to be able to do after training? How will you measure success?
- Use a variety of methods. Don't just rely on lectures. Use role-playing, case studies, and other interactive methods.
- Provide ongoing support. Training doesn't end when the course is over. Make sure the employee has access to resources and support as they apply what they've learned on the job.

By following these tips, you can make sure that your training is effective and that your new hire is ready to succeed.

The main results of the WPA research in the emerging economies are that the debt-to-GDP ratio is not a reliable indicator of the country's creditworthiness. It is the underlying factors, in particular the quality of the institutions, that really determine the country's creditworthiness. The authors also conclude that the debt-to-GDP ratio is a poor indicator of the country's creditworthiness.
